HBO's critically acclaimed series The Wire portrays the inner-city drug trade with a perspective and sophistication previously unseen. This course examines The Wire through the prisms offered by the series itself—the drug trade and the economic ripples caused, politics, education, and the media—so as to understand how drugs emerge as a sustainable (or viable) alternative to poverty. Attending to the effects of the drug trade at the personal and societal levels, this class seeks to reimagine (and in many cases reinterpret) the “justice” component of social justice. Reserved for members of the Fall 2017 Brown Learning Community.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNMH 270	TTh 8:00-9:15 AM			Beginning in the 1930's, continuing into the 1950's, the writers of American crime fiction engaged viewers and readers with the question: could any one of us commit a serious crime? Could an ordinary, upright person find him or herself involved in a murder? Do we all have a dark side that would make it possible for us to go down the path of crime? Consequently, these Noir crime stories focus on ordinary people, not notorious criminals. During the Noir golden age of the 1940's a number of these stories present the little-acknowledged negative effects of the Second World War on returning enlisted men or on their families while soldiers and sailors are stationed overseas. We think of the 1950's as a time of prosperity and optimism, but many of the crime novels from this period explore the darker side of this post-war period.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		ALLN 202	TTh 3:05-4:20 PM		It is a good idea to be creative when you are working on a novel; it is a bad idea to be creative when filing taxes. There is definitely truth to this statement; however, the problem with this statement is that it also suggests that creativity should be limited to certain times and places. As a result, too often creativity is seen as appropriate for discussions of the arts but not for conversations about education, suitable for intellectual debates about the humanities but not for approaches to real-world problems and issues of inclusivity, community, and identity. This seminar asks students to consider the issue of creativity from both a theoretical and a practical perspective and to explore the ways that creativity can be employed in meaningful ways to shape and impact certain types of communities and the identities affected by these communities. This course will require a willingness to engage in collaborative and inclusive learning as well as an enthusiasm for thinking imaginatively and acting creatively.

What we often overlook, however, is the fact that natural elements also exist, and sometimes thrive, within the urban realm. Historically, land managers have created large parks as separate places where nature was allowed to exist inside of a protected boundary. But what happens when people intentionally include natural elements in all parts of the urban landscape? This course will give students the opportunity to envision, through artistic examples, how humans can play a restorative role in our urban environments. Students will learn basic techniques for viewing and critiquing various forms of creative expression, and will gain greater awareness of urban environmental issues. Students will explore ways in which natural environments inform creative works and, in turn, how creativity can have positive influence on an urban ecosystem.

Successful food writers know how to take a passion for all things edible and capture that wonder in words. Many people think food writing is limited to critiques and recipes, but there's much more to it than that. Today's food writers illustrate how a penchant for the gastronomic can inspire a variety of formats including travelogues, business stories, celebrity profiles, social and political commentary, novels, and more. This course introduces students to the cross-genre world of modern food-centric writing, while exploring its evolution over the years. Memoirs, blogs, essays, poetry, destination pieces, cookbooks, restaurant reviews, screenplays – here's your chance to get an overview of the full spectrum of food writing while becoming a better writer in the process.

The concept of mobility will be examined in both literal and figurative terms as a means of freeing women from physical, geographical, and ideological constraints. Students will examine literary works as well as periodicals and other historical documents from the period to better understand how political, economic, and social issues of gender, class, and race at the turn of the twentieth century mark a significant moment in American history that continues to influence the extent and range of opportunities for women in America today. Students will also think critically and apply what they learn to consider, discuss, and research how questions of mobility persist and profoundly impact the lives of women and girls throughout the world at the turn of this twenty first century.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		GBCH 203	MW 6:00–7:15 PM			Science and Society is an interdisciplinary course that examines the relationship of science as a broad field and various aspects of society. There is no doubt that scientific discoveries and technological advances through history have shaped the development of societies and civilizations. At the same time, cultural norms and traditions throughout the world have guided the evolution of how we do science and research. It is difficult, if not impossible, to discuss the history of science and the history of cultures in isolation precisely because these two stories are intertwined. The objective of this course then will be to survey different aspects of this relationship. The overall goal of the course is to introduce students to scientific thinking and how fundamental principles underlying the scientific method can be used in everyday lives.

Broadway in the 1920s was a showcase for the sweeping changes transforming American culture in the early 20th century, including new roles for women, the mixing of social classes in new settings like Prohibition era speakeasies and creative innovation by African Americans in jazz clubs and music halls. Sons of immigrants from Europe including George and Ira Gershwin , Irving Berlin, Jerome Kern and Harold Arlen made up a large percentage of the new word and music smiths writing for Tin Pan Alley and Broadway's musical reviews. This course will explain the effect the effect Great American Songbook had on American culture during the 1930s, 40s and 50s. And will also examine the lives of the many great singers and musicians like Billie Holiday, Ella Fitzgerald and Frank Sinatra who became famous performing these immortal songs.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018	ALUM 213	MWF 10:00–10:50 AM	This course explores academic and practical questions about the effects of media on our identity as individuals, as Americans, and as citizens of a global society. Critical thinking skills and media literacy are vital to the survival of a democracy grounded in free expression and honest discourse, especially in a culture inundated with messages, some intended to inform, some to misinform. Students will participate in deconstructing not just what is being said, but how it is being said, and with what effects. Students will ask essential questions: Who is speaking this message? Who or what group is behind the speaker? What is the intent? Source of authority? Intended audience? How is the message conveyed? Through fact? Logic? Emotional appeal? Is there explicit or implicit bias? How does the medium shape the message and the audience? Ultimately, the course will challenge students to evaluate the validity of any media message in an age of "alternate facts" and "truthiness." Is it even possible to hear and understand messages that do not reinforce our individual biases? How do we define truth in contemporary media?

Students will learn to analyze the underlying message that is inherent in many of the songs that have been written in the rock genre in much the same way we learn to examine poetry and literary texts. In addition to studying lyrics of individual songs, this course will examine how it is that this genre changed social history by combating racism and challenging the establishment with alternate lifestyles and fashions. We will investigate the genre's outlaws and visionaries, and explore many of the revolutionary artists who defined rock 'n' roll. We will study the language of protest songs, such as those written to protest the Vietnam War, as well as songs written by current artists protesting such matters as income inequality and cultural diversity. We will study the work of Bob Dylan, The Beatles, Michael Jackson, Kurt Cobain, and Kanye West and others. We will also examine in great detail, the work of Tipper Gore and the Parents Music Resource Center, as well as the resistance from many of Rock's leading artists, with the intent of understanding the difference between censorship and parental discretion.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		MUS 101	MWF 11:00–11:50 AM			The African-American Spiritual holds an important and often overlooked place in the development of American music. The Spiritual in essence is the seed of African-American musical genres. Exploring the spirituals reveals many aspects about the development of these musical genres, particularly blues, jazz, soul, and R&B. However, the lessons gained from the Spirituals in terms of commentary on the state of humanity are just as, if not more, important than the musical ones. The African-American Spiritual teaches profound lessons in its musical, social, religious, political, and cultural revelations. These revelations are traced to other genres such as blues, jazz, gospel, soul, and avant-garde among others. This course will help you understand music as a cultural phenomenon, gain an appreciation for the African-American Spiritual and its progeny, and hopefully stimulate you to further investigate new and various aspects of music that you currently listen to. Upon evaluating our musical practices today, would our African-American ancestors be encouraged by what they heard? Would they be able to hear commentary on the human condition, perseverance of the human spirit, and an understanding of human kinship? Must be within 3 credits of Sophomore standing.

We will explore the changing shape of the musical in context of changes and developments in American culture, popular taste, and expression of personal and cultural identity. These are some of the questions that will guide our thinking: How did the distinct expressive form of American musical theatre develop? What kinds of cultural and historical pressures helped shape it? What kinds of artists have left their mark on the musical? What does the musical express about American culture that no other art form is able to capture? In this course, we will consider and analyze the ways in which musical theatre is a unique and powerful art form, capable of being shaped by and changing the culture in which it occurs. Must be within 3 credits of Sophomore standing.

This course will utilize the tools and methodology associated with visual culture studies to examine how religious imagery has been used across a broad spectrum of theological, cultural, and political contexts. Art and religion have often been reciprocal forces, religion inspiring art and art communicating ultimate realities. Indeed, present distinctions between the aesthetic and the spiritual were, and remain in the case of some cultures, unknown to societies who produced no secular art as such. Seeing The Diving will explore icon, image, place, and space and they ways in which humans have used various media to convey, shape, and influence attitudes and behavior. Must be within 3 credits of Junior standing.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNHH 107	MW 12:00–1:15 PM			The ancient Incan, Mayan, and Aztec cultures considered hot chocolate a cultural staple for hundreds of years before the European invasion of those empires brought them knowledge of it. But until the first Spanish publication on chocolate by Colmenero de Ledesma (Madrid 1631) was translated into English in 1640, neither the beans nor the knowledge of how to use them circulated beyond Spain. Thus, while the Spanish history of cacao dates to the earliest period of Spanish occupation of Mesoamerica, the general European experience of the drink, particularly for England and France, took about a century. What you probably did not realize when you last bit into a chocolate bar is that it contains one shocking and conveniently hidden ingredient: the bloody European conquest of the Americas. Chocoholism—with which you and your loved ones are likely afflicted—began with the story of taking the New World for Europe. It contributed to medical history and the rise of elite gastronomy, and much more recently has fueled the domination of world commerce by Nestlé. In short, chocolate is the story of what we might call Consumer Empire. Must be within 3 credits of Junior standing.

Generally, culture and religion is powerful, and it shows no signs of fading. If one wants to be informed about the world around them, culture and religion is a powerful phenomenon that calls for better understanding. In order to connect well with others in a globalised world, it may help to understand the religious beliefs of others. Thus, as one of the ancient civilizations, India has great stories on culture and religion to share. It is a melting pot of cultures and many religions are worshipped in India, including Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Jainism, Sikhism and Zoroastrianism. Buddhism, Hinduism, Jainism and Sikhism are founded in India while it is traditionally believed that St. Thomas, one of the 12 apostles of Jesus, had sailed to India to spread the Christian faith. Today, these religions are still practiced in all parts of the world by many people all over the world. Must be within 3 credits of Junior standing.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNHH 103	TTh 12:15-1:30 PM		The Society of Jesus is Catholicism's largest and most controversial religious order. It began in controversy and for many of the same reasons remains so today. Jesuits came to Latin America less than a decade after their establishment. This class discusses the Society's origins, its activities in Spanish America and Brazil, and why the Portuguese and Spanish crowns expelled them from their empires in 1759 and 1764. It uses contemporary accounts, Jesuit music, and films to explain their rise and fall. The restored Society found hostility in 19th century Latin America due to wide spread anti-clericalism while the 20th century brought renewed growth. The international Cold War together with Latin America's 'dirty wars' made Jesuits targets for military regimes. Catholic conservatives further criticized the Society's real and alleged activities in Latin America. This course examines why Jesuits have simultaneously been widely admired and widely reviled. It seeks to separate myths from historical fact while examining the Society's current role in Latin America and its prospects for the future. Must be within 3 credits of Junior standing.

IDC-401-01	Quality of Life	3	Open	15	1	Catron		Book Link
	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNTH 221	TTh 8:00–9:15 AM			We need the basics of food, water, shelter, and clothing to survive. But is survival enough to make life worth living? Why do we strive to create improvements in our world and our lives? We hear the Quality of Life used in a variety of contexts: financial, medical, political, social, and spiritual. This course explores what is meant by Quality of Life. Different disciplines require specific elements when discussing their definition of "Quality of Life." Throughout the semester, we will explore these definitions and trace how they have evolved. This journey will encompass reading a variety of texts to see how "Quality of Life" has and is being used to make policies in the public realm and is used to make personal life choices. We will also explore the tenets of Catholic Social Teaching as they intersect and closely relate to quality of life. Students will strive to articulate their own personal definition of "Quality of Life" and in doing so discover how their definition has been shaped. Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNHH 013	T 6:00–8:45 PM	With the guidance of the instructor, students will initiate and build sustainable systems using local sources of waste and materials. Students will learn to organize and initiate sustainable action plans in their community. Students will read text regarding and directly observe the environmental, social, ethical, and biological realities of the worldwide trash problem. Composting and its various constituent activities are presented as one sustainable solution to the issues surrounding trash. By following contemporary non-profit models, students will discover the urban agriculture movement, the sources of their food, learn the means to feed themselves anywhere, year-round, and begin to recognize and respond to the social justice issues surrounding food and a living planet. Students will operate and maintain a small, working, local trash-based composting and vermicomposting system at the Bellarmine Garden. This class will include speakers and trips off campus. Course fee: $20 to cover building materials for each student and fees at off-campus activities. Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNTH 221	TTh 4:30-5:45 PM			As a means of considering the agency and humanity of the incarcerated and the transformative processes and experiences of these men and women, this course will look at the organizations and people who create theatrical experiences in prison. Through this lens, we will collectively challenge our ideas about the incarcerated: the nature of our cultural and personal relationship to them, how we feel they should live, and who we believe them to be. We will supplement our research on arts practices in prison with articles, documentaries, written and recorded commentary, and guest speakers who will expand our understanding of prison life in general and what it means to be incarcerated in the US. This course will include at least one visit to the Luther Lockett Correctional Center in LaGrange, KY, to observe rehearsals of the Shakespeare Behind Bars and speak with the men about their experiences. Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

Students will examine the historical context in which race, gender, and class have been used to treat persons differently from those who set and enforced public policies. The class will explore the treatment of Native Americans, African slaves, women, immigrants, and those who did not own land during the colonial period. It will progress through exploration of the current status and roles of members of these groups today. Students will research the roles of education, religion, and law in preventing or enabling equity. How has discrimination against these groups affected their current abilities to be treated with equity? Do they share the same struggles? How have systems of power and legislation manipulated these groups to work against each other's progress in fulfilling their aspirations of equal treatment under the law and in the daily workings of the culture? How might these struggles be addressed together to end all forms of discrimination? Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

It has as its primary focus the development of the students' abilities to examine contemporary issues in a comprehensive and integrated way within a Catholic social justice perspective and a liberal arts and sciences context. Seniors from various disciplines come together in small groups with a faculty member to reflect on critical issues facing contemporary society, such as racism, economic and social justice, environmental concerns, national and international crises, and ethical issues arising from developments in science, medicine, and technology, as well as principles of Catholic social justice, including the recently published papal encyclical Laudato Si. Students are also expected to bring the knowledge and skills gained in their major fields of study and their other general education courses to the seminar as appropriate. Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		PAST 252	MW 3:00-4:15 PM		Many contemporary discussions of social thought and policy fail to move beyond emotion, assertion, and manipulation. Rarely do we encounter authentic argumentation marked by real rational exchange. To remedy this state of affairs, one must cultivate the personal habits and social climate necessary for embodied persons to work towards common understanding and common goals. In this seminar, we will begin by reckoning with the current quality of contemporary social discourse by using examples from a variety of media. We will then discuss how authentic argumentation happens within a particular tradition or school. To solidify this insight, we will turn to the tradition of Catholic theology formulated by St. Thomas Aquinas to gather principles for approaching contemporary social thought. Finally, we will evaluate certain features of Catholic social teaching—touching specifically on matters of economic and social justice and ethical issues arising from developments in technology—from within the Thomistic tradition in order to enrich our positions in current debates Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

	Lecture	1/04/2018 – 4/25/2018		CNHH 013	MW 3:00-4:15 PM		Medieval scholars, philosophers, and theologians acknowledged that God had been made known through two books: the book of Scripture and the book of Nature. This course will focus on learning how to “read the book of Nature” through personal experience in the field and intellectual interaction with experts of environmental ethics. Readings will be dissected and interpreted through Catholic (and broader Christian) social teachings and theologies; field work will consist of learning how to observe, identify, and research elements of nature. Wedding together the philosophical and practical sides of environmental study is what makes this course unique. Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.

This inescapable connection is made manifest in a host of current and urgent ecological and social justice concerns such as the Syrian refugee crisis, America's deportation of immigrants, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and the Dakota Access Pipeline, just to name a few. This class will inquire into the ecological ethics and social justice of land. What economic and environmental responsibilities does a society have in the use and care for its natural resources? What are the ethics of private property and national borders? What are the rights of displaced peoples seeking a homeland? Must be within 3 credits of Senior standing.
