Mondays – Lawn and Garden Dreaming will feature speakers Carol Gundersen, director of The Food Literacy Project; Bob Hill, who operated Heaven Hill Nursery; and Bill Funk, president of Evergreen Irrigation.

Tuesdays – Tours of historic homes will feature Locust Grove, the Thomas Edison House, and the architect-designed Shawn Hadley home near Simpsonville.

Wednesdays – Get a preview of Kentucky Opera’s new season, opening in September, and featuring Carmen, The Marriage of Figaro, Glory Denied and Robin Hood. Opera staff will talk about highlights from the productions.

Thursdays – The Greening of Louisville will feature speakers Max Maxwell, TARC director of marketing; Keith Talley, director of the Louisville Air Pollution Control District; and Gill Holland, developer of the Green Building.

The afternoon Summer Flicks series will feature great films from the late 1940s, ranging from The Heiress to My Darling Clementine. There are three one-week sessions. Each weekly session will begin at 1:30 p.m. on four consecutive weekdays. The first session runs July 8-11. Week 2 runs July 15-18. And the third week runs July 22-25. A LOOK INSIDE THREE NEW VERITAS INTEREST GROUPS

Veritas Voice writers spent some time with these new interest groups to see what they do. Here’s what we found. Meeting times and places are on the back page listing of all the interest groups.

Deal the Cards/Play Games Interest Group: I attended the first meeting of this group in February. There were 14 people and we met in a large classroom because Hilary’s, the planned location, was occupied. Dennis Wiseman, our facilitator, welcomed us with huge bags of games for us to choose to play. He brought Phase 10, Scrabble, Farkle, Rook, Rummy Q, and Balderdash, plus decks of cards.

I came to this group looking for a bridge game and I was not disappointed. Veritas member Roz Shaffer and I had the pleasure of meeting and enjoying a bridge game with two new Veritas members, Annette Amshoff and Jules Marquart.

During our time there, three to four games were going on at one time. Rocky Yates even played video solitaire on his phone while he waited for a new game of Phase 10 to begin. People had the opportunity to learn how to play new games, too.

I thought this group was a relaxing way to meet new members and to enjoy a little mental stimulation and some laughs. I plan to return for some more fun! - Linda Miller

Women’s Words Interest Group: Because writing is a solitary endeavor, Veritas member Sandra Rippetoe established Women’s Words as a forum for writers to share their poetry and fiction or non-fiction compositions. The group currently includes two poets and one prose writer, and while some seek publication, others just enjoy sharing their work. As an art form, literature or poetry should “speak” to the reader and touch one’s emotions. Authors’ work typically reflects their lives’ experiences, and Women’s Words is no different. The members have all been writing for most of their lives.

After the writer reads her work aloud, members make suggestions to enhance the author’s efforts. These discussions are key as the group’s encouragement bolsters the wordsmiths’ labors and typically generates ideas to improve or expand current work -- and occasionally suggests totally new writing topics.

At a recent meeting, Sandra read her poem “The View from the Mountain” while another member read a chapter from the magical realism novel she’s writing. Poets or prose writers are invited to join Women’s Words to share in the challenges and satisfaction that accompany writing about what’s important to you. - Gay Ellison

Thomas Merton Interest Group: Their copies of Thomas Merton’s “Conjectures of a Guilty Bystander” were marked with highlighter. Important passages were underlined. Pages were flagged. Members of the new Thomas Merton Interest Group had done their reading and came to their Friday morning meeting ready to talk, debate and question.

The group is an outgrowth of the fall, 2018, Veritas course about Merton, a monk of world renown. The bulk of his literary and artistic work is stored at the Merton Center at Bellarmine.

Several members in that class, led by organizer Cheri Powell, wanted to continue their studies and their thought-provoking discussions. “Brother Tim” Duncan, who led the class, now leads the group, sharing his rich knowledge of Merton. Between 15 to 20 people meet each month.

“Merton jolts us into thinking in a different way about social issues,” Brother Tim said at a recent meeting. The group talked about everything from Merton’s ideas on self-segregation to the controversial role of the U.S. in Central American politics. They didn’t always agree with him. Merton, for example, was distrustful of mass movements; but some group members argued you need such movements to effect broad change. They liked his ideas about citizenship; he stressed the importance of understanding opposing opinions. “It was like he was writing it for today,” someone said. – Leslie Ellis
MEET KAY MANGER

Kay Manger says she joined Veritas “before the turn of the century” and that she is one of “the originals.” Kay has served on the board and has taken a leadership and volunteer role for many years.

What prompted you to join Veritas?

I retired from the telephone company in 1993. Bill Stewart wrote an article for the newspaper in the mid-nineties inviting people to join. There were very few members at first but I wanted to meet people and attend classes. I was a member of a group in Louisville called the Third Century organization and we planned the festival Strassenfest, finding speakers and entertainers. I thought maybe I could help do this kind of activity at Veritas.

What do you remember from your childhood that had a big effect on you today?

I was the oldest of six girls. I remember that each night we would do dishes together. One night I looked at all of my sisters and thought “I need to get to know them well and always be there for them.” My sisters said I would “bop” them on the head with a shoe to get their attention.

What are your hobbies?

I collect clowns -- all types and all sizes. They remind me of people; sometimes their faces are happy but they are sad on the inside. I also sang in the Holy Name Choral Club which became the Louisville Chorus.

How do you relax at home?

I am a political junkie. I read about news and current events or watch shows about it on TV. It takes me all weekend to read The New York Times.

What makes you laugh?

I love the comedian David Sedaris.

What is your favorite Veritas memory?

I started Veritas’ Brown Bag Lunch. We would find a speaker or speakers, look for a classroom and then invite our members to come and bring their lunch. This is how our Lunch and Learn groups began.

ELECTIONS FOR THE VERITAS BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Each year in the spring, Veritas holds elections to fill seats on the society’s board of directors. The Nominating Committee, after seeking nominations from the membership, presented a slate of 15 members to run for election to the board for a two-year term, starting June 1, 2019, and ending May 31, 2021.

Confidential online voting replaced paper ballots this spring, and this very simple process -- clicking a link, versus mailing a form -- contributed to a healthy increase in participation. This year 54 percent of our members voted, compared to just 38 percent in 2018.

Keith Clements was newly elected to the board and joins the following incumbent directors who were re-elected for another term: Sandra Cherry, Kitty Darst, Ron Gordon, Jerry Hubbs, Panzi Panzera, Marilyn Schorin, Bud Spalding, Deloris White and Dennis Wiseman. They join the following existing directors: Rebecca Beyerle, Leslie Ellis, Tony Heitzman, Mary Moll, Cheri Powell and Linda Bailey, Bellarmine program coordinator and board liaison.
HONORS BANQUET IS A SPRINGTIME DELIGHT

The Veritas Society presents the Honors Banquet each year to recognize and celebrate the dedicated volunteers who work tirelessly to organize, produce and present Veritas courses, special events and field trips. It was a delight to share the evening with them.

On April 23, Sandra Cherry, the event chair, moderated the 24th honors celebration as 95 members and guests delighted in an evening of music, enticing cuisine – and just plain good old-fashioned fun at the Audubon Country Club.

The Rev. Tim Duncan shared an opening prayer and the Utility Brothers jazz ensemble entertained the group both before and after dinner. Guests enjoyed a delicious buffet meal of chicken, pasta, and a variety of salads, vegetables and dessert.

Board President Marilyn Schorin introduced the current board of directors, including those who were recently elected and re-elected. Mary Moll, curriculum committee chair, introduced and recognized all Veritas course presenters, course facilitators and production assistants.

Sandra Cherry then presented the Betts Meehan Lifetime Membership Award, which is named after one of Veritas’s founders, to presenter Michael Williams, honoring him for the many courses he has taught. Volunteer Chair Dennis Wiseman presented Outstanding Volunteer Awards to Nancy Walker and Connie Fondong in recognition of their frequent, reliable help with mailings to members.

The Bill Stewart Distinguished Service Award was presented to Bud Spalding by Marilyn Schorin in recognition of his many longtime contributions to the society. In addition to presenting classes and serving as a board officer, he organizes the summer program. He also helps organize the Lunch and Learn series.

Bellarmine President Dr. Susan Donovan also spoke to the dinner guests, and praised Veritas for being a “wonderful program.”

LUNCH AND LEARN CHANGES EXPLAINED

By Leslie Ellis

Fans of Veritas’s popular Lunch and Learn speaker series may be wondering why the format and location changed this spring. There was one big reason for both changes -- to make room for more people.

For years in Lunch and Learn, we started by enjoying lunch in the Private Dining Room (PDR) adjoining the student dining room. Then we listened to the speaker in the same place.

Under the new format, the speaker goes first. Those presentations have been moved to a spacious McGowan Hall classroom. Lunch follows, preserving the ever-important social aspect of Lunch and Learn. Everyone heads over to the dining hall, where most members settle into tables in the main dining room for a tasty meal and good conversation.

Two factors prompted the change. One was that the allowed capacity in the Private Dining Room, set by the fire marshal, had been reduced to 44 from 50. (Those who’ve attended know it was close quarters in there.) The second factor was that demand for Lunch and Learn often exceeded available space. Abigail Walsh, enrollment coordinator in the Veritas office, said she would get several dozen calls and emails from members who were unable to get into a Lunch and Learn session during registration and wanted to be placed on a waiting list. But there has never been a waiting list.

So a bigger room was sought to accommodate more people. The new meeting room in McGowan Hall holds 58 people, or 14 more people than the PDR. That means 84 more people can be accommodated over six L&L sessions in one term. Even with the higher enrollment limit, four of the five L&L sessions this past spring quickly filled.

And for lunch – no more cramped quarters. There’s plenty of room to spread out in the student dining room. The Private Dining Room is still open for our use for those who want a quieter setting.

APRIL FIELD TRIP TO THE TOYOTA PLANT AND MIDWAY

Some 55 Veritas members and guests toured the Toyota plant in Georgetown, Ky., on April 22, then spent the afternoon exploring downtown Midway and eating lunch at various restaurants.

Marilyn Nelson, Bill and Judy Werst, and Deloris White enjoy lunch in Midway.

Enjoying a sweet treat in downtown Midway.
Sometimes when I am in Veritas classes I feel uneasy about the direction of a discussion that may be too heated, too confrontational, or just uncomfortable. Some Veritas members report examples of members and lecturers who are openly critical in class of one’s attitudes or opinions.

Sometimes, too, I feel afraid to share my opinion about a topic because I think it may be too controversial and I am afraid to offend or be criticized. I think this reticence even prevents me from reaching out and getting to know new members.

Recently NPR did a month-long series about civility in which the hosts pointed out that even the word and the idea of civility spark controversy. Civility, to many, means good manners and respect. To others, civility is an outdated term which implies control, repression, and a criticism of the way people choose to express their ideas. They view it as an infringement on free speech. Later in the month the hosts shared findings from a research study which found that our ability to feel empathy for others has also been decreasing.

Definitions of civility vary, but generally they include the idea of politeness and courtesy in behavior and speech.

This fall, Kentucky will hold elections for governor and other state offices. Early in 2020, we will participate in presidential primary elections and then in the fall the election of our next president. At Veritas classes and activities, each of us will be able to share our ideas and opinions in what will likely be a spirited and exciting atmosphere.

When I began to read and research the concept of civil discourse, I was impressed at how much has been written about this and for how many hundreds of years. This is not a new topic.

David Brooks, opinion columnist for The New York Times, wrote a column on January 28, 2019, called “Kindness Is a Skill.” This article made this thorny complicated topic a little simpler for me.

Brooks said: “I went into journalism to cover politics, but now I find myself in national marriage therapy.”

Some ideas and advice from his article include:

- Tough conversations are usually about our tribal identity. Often our angst in a conversation is not so much about the topic itself but the fact that we feel our personal values are being disrespected and demeaned.
- One of the best questions to ask in a discussion is: “Tell me about the challenges you are facing.”
- Realize that your narrative may never win. There are intractable conflicts. Brooks says, “Get over it.”
- Never threaten a person’s autonomy. People need to feel that their opinions are valid. If a discussion gets too emotional, use a neutral voice, name the emotions that you hear, and treat them as valid.
- Show gratitude for people in the group and for their attention and ideas.
- Reject either/or conclusions in a discussion. There are usually many options to solving a problem.
- Presume the good in each person. Assume that each person in a discussion has good intentions and that you admire him for this.

I do not think all of these suggestions will be easy for me, but I am going to try to keep the broader goal of kindness as my guide.

TWO FIELD TRIPS PLANNED FOR SUMMER

The Field Trip Committee has planned two wonderful trips for this summer. Registration forms with details on times and costs will be mailed to members. The June 20 trip is to the John James Audubon State Park Museum and Nature Center in Henderson, Ky., with lunch at Moonlite BBQ in Owensboro. The September 17 trip will be to the National Underground Railroad Freedom Center in Cincinnati.
